Over time, small irritations accumulate, and given our fast-paced lives, we find ourselves simply ignoring our neighbors instead of putting effort into establishing good relationships. But in reality, taking some time to build relationships with neighbors pays a lot of dividends and prevents a lot of annoyance, drama and inconvenience. Here are 10 safe ways to be a good neighbor and take advantage of a close-up community. A handwritten note or immigration gift can bring unexpected joy in this world of virtual interactions. It is also a great way to introduce yourself to a new neighbor and make a good first impression. Related: Welcome home: 10 great gifts for a new homeowner Especially if you live next door to someone who is single, say goodbye and be friendly - but not too friendly. Read the signs of your neighbors, and if it seems to you that they do not want to continue the conversation, show that you are reliable by respecting their limits. Dealing with your neighbor's loud music and chatter can be the main cause of stress and divisiveness. Give neighbors heads-ups before you throw a party, and mutually pleasing time to cut music. With home-doorstep theft on the rise, keep an eye out for your neighbors' packages. Do you live in an apartment building? Bring deliveries from your neighbors to their front door. If you own a house, offer to collect your neighbor's packages, mail or newspapers when traveling. Related: 12 things you can do to protect yourself from stealing a little positive interaction package can go a long way toward easing tensions and concerns. If you plan to throw a party or start renovations, let your neighbors know about days and times when they might be uncomfortable. Find ways to thank them for being accommodative and return the favor by being flexible in return. Always think about how your actions can affect your neighbors. Don't let Fido bark or run around with a sis. If you live in an apartment, don't .m at 2:00 a.m. when you might upset the people who live below you. Thoughtfulness and consideration can be easy to overlook, but they help make the world more comfortable. Yes, there are times when group chat and apps like GroupMe can facilitate neighborhood activities and communication. Just remember that text messages are not a real forum for long-lasting conversations, complaints and jokes that could be misunderstood. For sensitive conversations, pick up the phone or knock on your neighbor's door. Be wary of unusual sounds and other signs of disturbance, such as dogs persistently barking or doors standing open. If children are playing on the street, make sure the adult is present. Our attitude towards our home is a reflection of how we feel about ourselves—and others. When you're proud of your home, you help set the tone for the whole neighborhood. So, roll out the welcome mat and place a few containers of greenery next to the front door. Your home sends a message: Make sure it's peace and kindness. Build relationships with neighbors. In good times and bad, you'll be lucky to have a community nearby. If you have become this safe haven for your neighbors, you can feel good knowing that they consider you a reliable and kind of understanding person that you would like to invite in an unpleasant necessity. This is why this man always keeps his keys in the ignition. iStock/vitranc Although no one would expect you to be a quiet little mouse all the time, your neighbors will appreciate a little peace and quiet while in bed. If you take outdoor parties by 11 p.m.m. or avoid mowing the lawn in a little morning, everyone will be well rested and more cheerful. iStock/gradyreeseMaybe you are respectfully quiet, but you have to deal with neighbors partying in a little morning. If the noise has become unbearable, they will appreciate hearing a silent reminder from you rather than from the police if you have gone straight to dialing 911, especially if it is a rare occurrence. iStock/ElenathewiseRasni overgrown lawn or mess may not eavesdrop on the owner, but a neighbor might see them as an eyesore. Keeping your lawn as clean as possible (within reason) means you're probably happier yourself, and your neighbors will enjoy the entire welcoming neighborhood. Start by avoiding these mistakes that make your yard look messy. iStock/ArtMarieAs as much as you adore your little angels, not everyone likes children, and maybe you don't realize that your screaming children are bothering your neighbors. But if your neighbors support a small business lemonade stand or offer babysitting, you can say that your children are just as likable as you'd hope. iStock/betyarlacaDogs usually get restless and loud when they're lonely, so your neighbors will be grateful if they don't have to listen to howls and yelps all day. Keep your puppy happy to downsize barking and try not to leave your pet alone for more than four hours. Keep your lawn keep clear of these common dangers to dogs in the yard. iStock/spxChromeS owner is no more, any house can end up with an overgroft lawn or a large pile of unread newspapers. Your neighbors will undoubtedly appreciate the offer to take care of these tasks while they're gone, and they'll probably return the favor the next time you leave town. Do not make these mistakes on the trip before your next trip. iStock/cmart7327 Although you legally have the same street parking rights as your neighbors, your neighbors probably have places they consider their own. Staying outside these locations allows them to park right outside their home instead of walking half a block to their front door. If your family's cars are taking over available street parking, see if you can rearrange. If you use the garage mainly for storage, it may be time to clean up to make your vehicle fit. These are items you should never keep in the garage. iStock/NONGAMT Does it matter how close you are to your neighborhood family, your neighbors can enjoy the fence or hedge that separates your yards. Even if it is technically on your property, ask their thoughts before removing it. They could resent the newfound lack of privacy if you don't warn them.
